What the Plains of Northern Michigan Will Product.

From the Farwell Register. About six years ago, shortly after settlers began to locate on the plains in the Northern part of Clare county, the editor of this paper visited that section and in a series of articles showed up its natural advantages and adaptability for original treal nursesses.

natural advantages and adaptability for agricultural purposes, at the same time making predictions as to the future productions of these lands. If all of the predictions have not been fulfilled it has not been through fault of the soil or judgment of the writer, but because of the yet undeveloped state of that section. In our wildest speculation we never thought of predicting the successful growing of peaches on the plains. On Saturday W. W. Green, of this place, returned from the plains in Summerfield township, bringing with him a quantity of peaches that were raised on the farm of Jonathan Green, who has several bearing trees, which will bear several bushels of peaches. He also brought speciels of peaches. He also brought speci-mens of cherries, plums and currants, as mens of cherries, plums and currants, as fine as is grown anywhere. As for apples there is no question about them, as it has been known for some time that they do well. Mr. Green merely tried the peaches as an experiment and might have raised one hundred bushels or more this year had he known they would do well. It has also been demonstrated that grapes of the hardier varieties will do well here. This then, is a good fruit country, and extensive orchards can be raised here at comparatively little expense, just as we predicted six years ago.

As to spring crops, this year has fairly demonstrated what this land will produce under favorable circumstances. Wheat was badly winter killed and is rather scattering except what was drilled in, which is good. Oats are said to be good. One man informs us that he has a piece that stands four feet in height and over, well-headed, and other crops that look equally well. The settlers whom we talked with appear to be well satisfied, and predict that these lands will yet be most valuable in this county.
